

RODNEY GENTRY

Whether at work, at home, or out and about in the community, you'll never see Rodney Gentry in dress pants. In fact, one of the things he loves about moving to Scottsdale from Chicago is that the fashion is much more casual—which, he explains, fits his personal style.

"I feel more comfortable [in casual clothes]," he explains. "It fits my personality better."

Gentry is hairdresser in Scottsdale, with a specialty in hair color. At work, you'll find him in jeans and a nice shirt. When he's not working, he's casual as well, wearing a tee shirt and shorts. You'll often see him hiking, working out, or spending time with his dogs.

Gentry favors clothing from True Religion, Theory and G-Star, and likes to shop at Nordstrom, though he says that a large part of his wardrobe is from True Religion. "I spend a lot of money there," he says, laughing. He also points out that he likes the brand not only because of the fit and style, but because all of the products are made in the United States.

Gentry also likes to shop when he's in Chicago, saying that he finds the men's fashions choices there a little trendier.

Still, he doesn't miss the required work attire from his time in Chicago—"In Chicago, I had to wear dress pants and a shirt in black, white or gray. It didn't make dressing for work any fun!"

Ruth Leighton, Leighton Agency Inc.

"Who knew men were going to be allowed to have scruff, spiky hair, jeans, a plaid shirt and be right in style. I love fashion that allows us to live our lives comfortably with style."

Sheree Hartwell, Ford/Robert Black Agency

"Great casual, yet coordinated look. Still fashionable but looks comfortable."

Tracey Martin, Rebirth Style

"I love the laidback vibe of the jeans and plaid shirt. Picture perfect! Great hair, too. Well done!"
